

A Brief History of Body Wraps

Beauty treatments like face masks & body wraps have been used for centuries. Even in pre-historic times there is evidence from illustrated reference to the use of herb & moss poultices (i.e. mud & clay body wraps). We know from hieroglyphs that Cleopatra used Nile clay poultices & milk baths as skin treatments as well. In Medieval times the mustard poultice was a common treatment for skin infections.

The advent of chemical medicine at the turn to the 20th century saw the decline of many traditional therapies in favor of more modern pills & potions. For a while conventional medicine denied that the epidermis (skin) was in any way porous & dismissed virtually all skin treatments as superficial. In recent years, however, this has been exposed as nonsense and the use of medicinal patches for all sorts of treatments, from nicotine addiction to pain relief, by the application of skin patches is common place & proven effective.

Salon body wraps were first introduced in the 1960's in the USA & successfully provided instant visible inch loss to any part of the body within an hour or two. A TV test first broadcast in the 1970's on the popular American Phil Donahue Show vividly demonstrated the inch loss capabilities of a full body wrap. Unfortunately, relatively few people could afford such luxury treatments.
